WHY INTERNATIONALIZE THE CURRICULUM?

In today's fast-paced and interconnected world, higher education must adapt to equip students and faculty for global challenges.

Universities are no longer confined to local or national roles—they are evolving into global centres of knowledge, collaboration, and opportunity.

At the core of this shift is the internationalization of curricula, which empowers students and educators with the skills and perspectives needed to thrive in a globalized job market.

BIP'S TOPICS

Exploring how Erasmus+ is shaping internationalization opportunities

Erasmus Partnership for Cooperation

joint short-cycle courses designed to enhance student employability in the fast-evolving tech sector

Erasmus Capacity Building

strengthening education with an emphasis on digital competencies and international collaboration

Erasmus Mundus joint master studies

design to offer your and world-wide students the chance to specialize in various areas and gain diverse, cross-cultural experiences.

BY EMBEDDING INTERNATIONAL PERSPECTIVES IN OUR PROGRAMS, WE ENABLE:

Broader worldviews for students and faculty

Enhanced graduates employability through global skill-building

Stronger academic and industry partnerships that drive innovation

In the past, internationalization was often evaluated using metrics such as the number of English-taught courses or the proportion of international students. While these metrics remain significant, the true value of internationalization lies in its ability to create transformative experiences for both students and staff by improving and transforming the curricula.
